It was a trip I'll never forget.

I and my family decided to have a barbecue in the forest. On our way we stopped several times to take some pictures. During one of those stops my younger sister Lisa, who is quite an ignorant and arrogant person, started to show herself from her worst side:

- Why have we stopped again? I don't want to stay here, let's better have some barbecue already.

I myself don't like taking photos, but her behavior is wrong. She is always being rude and it is usual for her to avoid our parents.

After an <sup>100</sup> argument she was angrily going forward and backwards and then something bizzare happened: after another step she suddenly disappeared. Confused, I stood there for a moment before it occurred to me that she was rolling down a hill. That instance I and my father rushed to help her. Hopefully she wasn't hurt much, but she was really terrified.

Climbing back with her appeared to be more than challenging, but in five minutes we were already up the hill with our mum.

- Are you alright? - she asked. It took 10 seconds for the answer:

- Thank you.
- Err.. What?
- Thank you. - <sup>too</sup> it was the only thing she said.

Our father is a kind person who would always tolerate Lisa's sick behavior and ~~to~~ ~~not~~ forgive her bewildering attitude.

At that moment I who <sup>literally</sup> despises taking pictures grabbed a camera and took a photo. A photo of a girl who for the first time thanked her caring father. ~~A picture of~~
