10p.

It was a trip I'll never forget. It was a summer day when I set off with my family to Baikal lake. Everyone was thrilled by the trip. All seemed to be great but suddenly we heard weird sound in the engine in our car. "You can't be ignorant to this" - said the mother. The father stopped to check the engine. The atmosphere was bewildering. The whole family was silent. Unfortunately, the car was out of order. We were confused as the car broke in the middle of a forest. "There's no any people" - groaned my mother. Then we went out to have lunch. Eventually, we began talking to each other. Everybody was bizarred because of thick forest. My mother was sitting in a blanket. Despite ^{the} cold weather, she kept laughing. Her face was happy and the eyes were full of love. She was holding my sister. ~~The sister as slim as mom.~~ When I look at her, I think she took after mother: her blond hair, big brown eyes, which reflect love, and a big smile.

Every time I recall this trip, my heart begins trembling. Although the trip was quite challenging, it was the most lovely day. There's nothing better than feeling their love.
